Her Beautiful Eyes

James Whitcomb Riley

O her beautiful eyes! they are blue as the dew
On the violet's bloom when the morning is new,
And the light of their love is the gleam of the sun
O'er the meadows of Spring where the quick shadows run
As the morn shifts the mists and the clouds
from the skies—
So I stand in the dawn of her beautiful eyes.

And her beautiful eyes are as mid-day to me
When the lily-bell bends with the weight of the bee.
And the throat of the thrush is a-pulse in the heat,
And the senses are drugged with the subtle & sweet
And delirious breaths of the air's lullabies—
So I swoon in the noon of her beautiful eyes.

O her beautiful eyes! they have smitten mine own
As a glory glanced down from the glare of the Throne;
And I reel, and I falter and fall, as afar
Fell the shepherds that looked on the mystical Star;
And yet dazed in the tidings that bade
them arise—
So I grope through the night of her beautiful eyes

TWO HOUSES ROBBED AT OAK LANE

Thieves Get in While Families are Absent — Rooms Ransacked — Thieves Escape.

Another robbery at Oak Lane, where thieves have been at work for several weeks, was reported to the Branchtown police station last Monday. For the second time inside of three years the home of W. Percy Mills, at 70th avenue and 12th street, was entered during the absence of the family and jewelry and valuables valued at about $300 secured by the thieves.

The Cheltenham township police also made public on Monday the fact that the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Stringfield, of Mountain avenue, Melrose Park, had been entered on Friday and several hundred dollars' worth of clothing and jewelry removed.

At the Mills home access was gained to the house by forcing a rear window. Then all the bureau drawers, closet and wardrobe doors on the second floor were jimmied open and everything of value taken. The injury to the furniture, according to Mr. Mills, will exceed the actual cost of the goods and chattels taken.

Entrance to the Stringfield home was gained by forcing the kitchen door during the absence of the family. The entire house was ransacked.

HEATER EXPLODED HOUSE BURNED

Loss of Over $12 000 When Fine Residence and Contents Were Destroyed by Fire—No Water Mains Near.

Although three fire companies were on the scene, the residence of William Bower, on Red Lion road, near Knight road, Torresdale, burned to the ground last Saturday morning. An explosion of the hot water heater caused the fire.

The loss to the house, which is a three-story frame structure, is estimated to be over $10,000, while the furnishings, with jewelry, money and other articles belonging to the family, added over $3,000.

Mrs. Bower and her youngest daughter, Betty, six years old, were in the house alone when an explosion shook the structure from top to bottom.

Both were shaken but escaped uninjured. Joseph Brown, a colored employe, rushed into the house and attempted to get into the basement. He was met by flames and was compelled to retreat. Thomas E. Cole, a neighbor, assisted Mrs. Bower and her daughter to safety and then telephoned for the fire engines at Holmesburg and Bustleton, several miles from the scene.

When the firemen arrived it was found that although the house is within the city limits there was not a fire plug within a mile. Consequently the two companies were compelled to connect one long hose and draw water from a creek 700 yards away.

This required some time, and when a stream was finally secured the firemen saw that the house was doomed and confined their efforts to saving the stable in the rear and preventing the flames from spreading to the residence of the Cole family.

BRUTAL MURDER NEAR FOX CHASE

Farmer Hugh Kelly Beaten to Death by Two Men—He Died in Frankford Hospital—Police Looking for Assailants.

That Hugh Kelly, foreman on the farm of Joseph Young, Veree road and Rhawn street, Fox Chase, died as the result of a brutal assault, was shown Thursday by an autopsy made by Coroner's Physician Wadsworth, and detectives and police are searching for two farmhands who have disappeared, and who are suspected of the crime. The autopsy showed that the man's breast had been crushed in, that three ribs were broken and that he was otherwise brutally beaten with a heavy club or some weapon of a similar kind.

Kelly died at the Frankford Hospital on Monday night, and the police and detectives say that they would have had the men responsible for his death if the doctors at the Frankford Hospital had not reported the cause of death as acute dilitation of the heart, accompanied by pneumonia. This report, they said, prevented an investigation of the murder charge and gave the men who beat Kelly an opportunity to get away. Kelly had been employed in the vicinity of Fox Chase for 21 years, and was considered an expert farmer.

The men, who, it is claimed, attacked him with heavy clubs, did not give him a chance to defend himself, but struck him down from behind belaboring him until they believed him dead. He was discovered unconscious and taken to the Frankford hospital. The cause of the attack, according to the detectives, was jealousy on the part of his assailants, who are friends, and one of whom it is said is anxious to secure his place as foreman of the Young farm. Special Officer Ayres, of the Twenty-seventh district, on Thursday arrested Charles Gordon as a material witness in the case. The police said that Gordon was either present during part of the attack on Kelly or knew the men who had assaulted him.

It causes the average young girl less inconvenience to lose her heart than to lose her appetite.

A COLLEGE GIRL'S DAY.

She breakfasts on a pickle,
And then the custom is
To go and spend a nickel
Upon a glass of fizz.

Along about ten-thirty
She needs some solid fare
And goes with Grace or Gertie
To purchase an eclair.

At twelve on pie she lunches,
And through the afternoon
From time to time she munches
A dainty macaroon.

Her pocketbook she'll pillage
At duck and gaily trudge
To purchase in the village
Ingredients for fudge.

At night, with loosened tresses,
It is her dearest wish
To cook up awful messes
Upon a chafing dish.

And when she's dope with brewing
And all the house is dumb
She goes to bed still chewing
Her little wad of gum.

HURT BY FALLING TREE

Inmate of Poor House Probably Fatally Injured.

Samuel Emmett, 62 years old, an inmate of the Oxford and Lower Dublin Poor House, at Holmesburg, was seriously injured last Saturday while removing a large tree from the grounds of the institution. Emmett, with several other inmates, had put a rope around the top of the tree and pulled it down. When he ran away from the falling tree he stumbled and fell beneath it. His fellow-workmen went to his assistance, but before they could reach him he had been crushed. The men ran in all directions screaming for help, which caused much excitement among the other inmates.

The injured man was taken to the Frankford Hospital, where physicians say his chances for recovery are slight.

STATE TO KEEP VALLEY FORGE MONEY

Supreme Court Rules That State Commissioners Shall Retain Money Raised by Individuals.

In an opinion by Justice Von Moschzisker, the Supreme Court on Monday decided that the fund raised by the Centennial and Memorial Association of Valley Forge, which was dissolved after the State, in 1893, appointed a commission to perpetuate and preserve as a public park, the site on which the Continental Army was encamped under General Washington, shall remain in the hands of the commissioners to be devoted to the purposes for which it was contributed.

When the Centennial and Memorial Association was incorporated in Montgomery county, certificates of stock at $1 a share were issued to the extent of about 7,600 shares. Five thousand of these shares were held in trust for the Patriotic Order Sons of America, which paid off a mortgage of $3,000 on the site in 1883.

Subsequently, the State was given the right to take the property at Valley Forge by eminent domain, and the fund in question arose from the award made to the Centennial and Memorial Association. This association was dissolved in 1910, and the Court appointed the Commissioners of Valley Forge trustees and directed that the fund be paid over to them to carry out the purposes for which it had been held.

An appeal was taken from this decree, asking that the moneys be paid over to the holders of the certificates of stock for their individual use, but the Court refused on the ground that the funds were contributed for charitable purposes and must be devoted to that purpose.

NEW YORKER INVENTS HOUSE

In Two Sections, With Walls and Roof Hung on Hinges—Quite Easy to Keep Ventilated.

A rather elaborate poultry house has been designed by a New York man. It is in two sections, one of which slides upon the other and is small enough to be easily taken apart. The lower section has screens along its side walls, while the wooden walls are hinged at the top so that they can be opened at any angle desired, chains holding them in position. In this way ventilation can be obtained and the interior protected from rain or too much light. The upper section, which has a peaked roof, has a door at one end and a series of roosts arranged around the sides and ends on the interior. One-half of the roof is screened, too, and the top on this side is hinged so that it can be kept open or closed. The entire roof can also be slid on or off at will. This arrangement makes it easy to clean the house thoroughly in all parts and keep it well ventilated, thus eliminating insect pests to a great degree.

Cure for Discontent.

If you really want to renew the enjoyments of your country home try boarding at a city hotel or restaurant a day or two; then you will find that your common, every-day life is far and away better and sweeter than anything that you found in the city.

Buying a pair of horses at a sale for $505, William Roberts, of Wrightstown, had the animals two days, and upon opening the stable door in the morning found one dead.

Woman Finally Recovers From Nervous Breakdown

Impoverished nerves destroy many people before their time. Often before a sufferer realizes what the trouble is, he is on the verge of a complete nervous breakdown. It is of the utmost importance to keep your nervous system in good condition, as the nerves are the source of all bodily power. Mrs. Anna Kounz, 211 Mechanic St., Pueblo, Colo., says:

"For many years I suffered from nervous prostration; I was unable to do any house work and doctors failed to help me. Remedies I tried from druggists did not do me a particle of good. A neighbor told my husband about and he procured a bottle. After the first few doses I showed a marked improvement and after taking two bottles I was entirely cured. I have been perfectly well for years and cannot praise Dr. Miles' Nervine too highly."

If you are troubled with loss of appetite, poor digestion, weakness, inability to sleep; if you are in a general run down condition and unable to bear your part of the daily grind of life, you need something to strengthen your nerves. You may not realize what is the matter with you, but that is no reason why you should delay treatment.

has proven its value in nervous disorders for thirty years, and merits a trial, no matter how many other remedies have failed to help you.

Sold by all druggists. If first bottle fails to benefit your money is returned. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind. 5

The Amir's Move

NARRATIVE OF CAPTAIN ADAMS

"Detective-Diplomat"

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

I SHALL always remember the 10th day of March, 1905, because of two remarkable incidents that happened to me on that date.

I had returned from a mission to a foreign court, which I had accomplished to the great satisfaction of his majesty, King Edward VII., and was awaiting a new summons in my chambers in Half Moon street, Piccadilly. For this reason I did not venture to go far from home, but contented myself with a short walk every afternoon. On the date I have mentioned I was walking homeward about three o'clock in the afternoon when I noticed a crowd collected around a shop window. Pushing my way to the front, from curiosity, I perceived that they were watching a mechanical figure, dressed out in Indian costume and turbaned, around whose neck hung a card on which was printed an invitation to all and sundry to play chess with the automaton.

Having always prided myself on my chess playing, and having acquired something of a reputation at the game when stationed with my regiment in India, at home and where it best flourishes, I stepped within and sat down at the board opposite the figure, which was, of course, as I well knew, merely an automaton manipulated with wires by a player somewhere in the basement of the building. Hardly had three moves been exchanged before I perceived that I was matched against a player of no mean ability. The game was a hard one, but, just as I was confident that I had my adversary at my mercy, by a totally unexpected move he corralled my queen and took her with his bishop, placing me in a position of hopeless inferiority.

Piqued at this unexpected ending, I resigned the game and set up the pieces afresh. The same thing happened. Again the game went my way; again my queen was hemmed in and taken by the bishop of the automaton. And a third time the same thing occurred, nor could I discern in what way I placed my piece in jeopardy.

I had been so intent upon the game that, when I arose to go, I found a couple of hours had elapsed. Evening was approaching and Piccadilly lay under a dense white fog. As I passed out of the door a colored attendant, with a salaam, handed me a piece of cardboard on which was written the unsigned message:

"I will play you again!"

That suited me, but for the present I must get home to see whether any message had arrived for me from the foreign office. I had groped my way through the fog as far as what I thought was the Green park, when a momentary lifting disclosed to me the name of a street totally unfamiliar set into the wall of an old garden. I had evidently taken some wrong turn and wandered into what I conjectured was the neighborhood of the Tottenham Court road district, or some purlieu of Bloomsbury. While I was debating my next move I was startled to hear a woman's voice whisper into my ear, in a manner betokening extreme agitation:

"Do you understand French, monsieur?"

At my affirmative answer she appeared out of the fog and clasped me by the arm. She was of an Oriental cast of features—Greek or Syrian. I should have guessed—but her French was precise and idiomatic. Her first words revealed her status.

"My mistress is sorely in need," she whispered. "Will you help her?"

"What am I to do?" I rejoined, scrutinizing her carefully.

"She has been kidnaped. She is kept in this house; she has been there for days. Tonight she may escape before the prince returns from St. James' palace if some one will help her, show her where to go. Ah, monsieur will assist; he is a gentleman! Our need is desperate."

My curiosity had almost overcome my prudence when the woman fairly dragged me through the gate of the garden, across a tiled pavement, and into the fog-bound recesses of an ancient house, apparently unfurnished, up several flights of stairs, until we stood before a door on the top story. She knocked twice and waited; suddenly the door was flung open from within, disclosing a light so dazzling that my eyes, accustomed to the obscurity of the dim street, were for a moment half blinded.

A woman stood before me, of the same cast of features as the maid, but of an haughtier air of one born to command, which quickly demonstrated to me their relative positions. As she stood in the entrance of the brilliantly lighted room, which was richly carpeted and furnished with wonderful hangings of the silkiest texture, and furniture inlaid with mother-of-pearl, she appeared to have been struggling with that bane of civilized life—packing a portmanteau. Odd garments and toilet articles lay scattered over the floor.

She cast a searching glance at me over her light gauze veil, which only enhanced the beauty of her features.

"This gentleman speaks French. God sent him—by a miracle. He will assist!" exclaimed the maid.

"Mademoiselle can rely upon my service to any extent," I answered.

The woman's attitude, which had been of measured hostility, suddenly altered.

"I believe you," she cried. "I do not care who you are. There is five minutes yet before we need start. Sit down; I will be brief. If at the end of my narrative you decide that I am not worthy of aid—"

"It is not necessary to tell me," I protested.

She flushed. "But I do not choose to be a beggar under false pretenses," she cried. "I am the Princess Khadijah Kassim. I see the name conveys no meaning to you—"

"On the contrary," I answered, "the name of Khadijah Kassim's father was famous in the Punjaub."

"You have been in India?" she cried.

"I was an officer in the Indian army."

"Nothing could be better. Listen, then, and I will be as speedy as possible. When my father was old he foresaw that upon his death, since he had no son, Prince Rakkim Khan would seize upon the throne of Beluchistan. The prince demanded my hand in marriage in order to obtain the throne with me. To avoid him, my father sent me to Paris to be educated, together with my maid here, in a convent. There we spent five years together. Meanwhile he begged the British government to declare a protectorate over his kingdom and to acknowledge me as his heir. The negotiations dragged. My father died suddenly last November. Rakkim Khan sent troops into Beluchistan and seized the throne. Then, having secured his position, he came boldly to London to justify himself with the British government. You have heard he was here?"

The papers had been full of the visit of this eastern prince; had vied with one another in publishing stories of his magnificence, his cruelty, his chivalry, his eccentricities—above all, his passion for chess. Only that day, I knew, he had had an interview with the king.

"On the way he sent envoys to Paris. They presented forged credentials from my father, of whose death I was unaware. I went with them; they delivered me into the prince's hands in this house, to which I came expecting to meet my father. He holds me here in captivity and every day he plagues me to marry him, to place his right to the throne beyond dispute. And his old abbot disputes with me upon the duties of our religion, showing how a woman may have no say against such a suitor."

I had heard of the abbot too, the fanatical Mullah of Seistan, who had much the same rank among the Mohammedan hierarchy as a bishop holds with us.

"This afternoon, in the fog, I learned that a way of escape lay open. The slave who guards me accompanied his master. The prince was oversure of me. Help me to fly to my own country and I will reward you richly."

"When will the prince return?" I asked.

"At any moment," she replied, wringing her hands.

Yet she remained there helplessly and seemed to make no effort to escape. It would have been inexplicable in a European; but I understood how far divorced is the life of an oriental lady from all action. Accustomed to have their every move anticipated by a host of slaves, in moments of peril, when they have to shift for themselves, they seem to be affected by a sort of paralysis.

"Come, then," I exclaimed impatiently. I snatched up a fur traveling cloak which I perceived lying upon a chair, and wrapped it around her. She turned to her grip, in which she had been trying to pack some foolish and unnecessary articles; a big doll, sweetmeats, a dog collar studded with pearls. I took the portmanteau from her by force. "There is no time for it!" I said. "This way!" And I fairly hustled the two women into the corridor and, taking each by one arm, descended the stairs with them. At the bottom the maid seemed to take courage; she released herself and, running ahead, opened the door which communicated with the garden. It was night, and the fog was clearing; stars shone faintly through the moving wrack. A carriage rolled up to the entrance and stopped. We ran down the garden and pulled at the gate which led into the street. It swung back and, blocking the entrance, I saw Rakkim Khan himself and the Mullah, in his green turban.

An evil smile swept across the prince's features. He understood the situation perfectly. "Twice in one day!" I heard him mutter in Punjaubi, though I did not understand the significance of the phrase. For one moment he stood as though paralyzed with rage; then he whipped a short sword from under his cloak. That moment of delay saved my life. I leaped upon him, caught his sword belt as he tugged at the scabbard, and closed my hand upon the hilt. We wrestled for the weapon together, the prince's face livid with rage and fear. "Fly!" I cried in French to the women; but neither stirred. Rooted to the spot, apparently, with terror, they had not even strength to scream. I felt that I was the prince's master. Gradually I overcame his resistance. In another instant I should have had him at my mercy when a shower of sparks flew up before my eyes. Then a dark curtain seemed to close over my brain and blot out the impressions of the senses.

When I opened my eyes a policeman was shaking me. He helped me to my feet, not unkindly, believing that I had imbibed too freely, and solicitous for my welfare, his solicitude not unmingled with anticipations of pecuniary recompense for helping me to my residence. All at once his aspect changed.

"Blackjacked!" he muttered, holding up my head, which drooped unsteadily. "What 'appened, sir?"

"Happened?"

"Your 'ead's all covered with blood, sir. Did they get your watch and cash?"

No, my watch, money and jewelry were undisturbed.

"Must have been scared away, sir. Shall a call a keb, sir?"

"Yes. What is the time?"

"Arf past eleven at night, sir."

"And where am I?" I asked. "Is that the Persian embassy?"

His eyes followed the direction of my finger. Then he burst into laughter.

"Persian H'embassy? Lord love you, sir, that's Greek street, Soho, the worst street in London."

My cab came up, I tipped the man, and was driven home to Half Moon street. All the way I puzzled over what had occurred. Presently it became clear. I had been struck on the head by the Moslem bishop, who, persuading the prince that it would be unsafe to dispatch me, had had me conveyed in a cab and flung into the alley in which the policeman found me. But what of the women? My brain was reeling. I reached home, found my way to my apartment and, my servant Talbot being away on furlough, undressed myself somehow and was soon fast asleep.

I awoke with a clear brain but an aching head. At first I was inclined to set down the whole affair to nightmare; then a quantity of clotted blood upon my pillow convinced me that I had actually been the victim of an assault. I dressed leisurely. When I entered the next room, however, I found a dispatch requiring my presence at St. James' palace instantly. It had been there since the preceding evening.

Gulping down a measure of hot coffee, I sprang into a cab and was soon at the palace gates. I found that I had been expected on the preceding evening. Sir Francis Bacon (now Baron) Knowles, his majesty's secretary, was inclined to lecture me in his usual fussy manner, but a sudden summons from his majesty sent him hurrying out. When he returned he brought the king with him. He greeted me cordially.

"Captain Adams," he said, "we have another mission for you, one peculiarly suited to your romantic temperament. We want you to go to Paris and take charge of a Persian princess."

"The devil!" I cried, forgetting to whom I spoke. "Rakkim Khan's got her!"

Thereupon I had to explain the events of the preceding evening. The king was very grave when I had concluded my story.

"If Rakkim Khan gets back to Beluchistan," he said, "he will lease a seaport to Germany in return for her protection, and so give her a foothold upon the Persian gulf littoral in revenge for our refusal to countenance his usurpation. You must follow them up at once and find means to set the princess free. Once freed, take her to Peshawur, upon the Beluchi border, where a regiment of British troops will be placed at your disposal to restore her to the throne. We cannot let Beluchistan fall into the prince's hands. But so long as the princess is in his power he holds her as a hostage, and all our efforts will be fruitless. The prince left England at midnight yesterday for Calais. If only we had known he had her with him—"

That was all the instructions that I received. How was I to rescue this helpless lady when her very whereabouts were unknown? I soon reflected, however, that it would be impossible for the prince, traveling with his retinue, to keep his progress secret from the police of the countries which he passed through. Accordingly I got into telegraphic communication with several continental capitals, and soon ascertained that he had landed at Calais that morning and taken train for the German border.

There was only one thing to do; to stick doggedly upon their trail and follow them. So long as they were in Europe I should be powerless; when they reached the no man's lands of Asia it would be different. For it was clear that, in order to avoid the British ships of war cruising in the Persian gulf, they would be compelled to make the overland journey across the Arabian deserts and through Mesopotamia.

My first admonition that they knew I was in pursuit came to me when I occupied their suite in the hotel at Belgrade, which they had evacuated 12 hours before. The room I slept in was the princess'. Pinned to the cover of the dressing table was a hasty scribble in French:

"Help me, monsieur. When once we have reached the desert I shall be in his power and forced to marry him. Mon Dieu! I hate him more each moment. I shall stab myself to the heart rather than wed him."

It was not my intention to attack the prince and his retinue single-handed. I had been busy sending out telegraphic dispatches; a detachment of jackies from the British squadron was to be placed at my disposal as soon as they crossed the Dardanelles and moved upon Damascus. This was the starting point of the caravan journey, and we were to come upon them in a pass of the Taurus range, between Damascus and the sea.

In the hotel at Constantinople I found another note, left in the hands of the dragoman, for "the gentleman who should arrive from England on the morrow."

"I have abandoned hope," it read. "I have secured a loaded pistol. I swear that, unless you rescue me soon, I shall blow out my brains."

A British cruiser was in Constantinople. While the prince was embarking to cross to the Asiatic shore upon a leaking Turkish gunboat, I was selecting my company from among the seamen for the enterprise of staying his progress. I selected 15 veterans of little eastern wars. On the following morning we landed at Aleppo and proceeded inland toward our destination, disguised as tourists, since, under international law, our act was invasion of friendly territory.

Upon the second morning, encamped in the pass of the Taurus, we had word from our scouts that a caravan was approaching. The pass was the only entrance to Damascus through the mountains; once they gained this, nothing could bar their progress.

I placed my men in advantageous positions behind rocks; then, as the long line of mules and camels came into sight, rode down with a white flag to greet them. An elderly Turk came out to me.

"You have with you," I said, in French, "a prince and a princess whom we are seeking. Give them to us and go your way in peace, brother."

"We are but merchants," he quavered, his white beard rising and falling in agitation. "We carry goods to Damascus. Moreover, there is no woman in this caravan. Come and see for yourself."

"It is well," I answered. "But remember, at the least treachery, I have men hidden behind those rocks who will shoot you down mercilessly."

We rode down the line, past the halted camels and the mules, which, released from their harness, were rolling ecstatically in the dust of the road. Upon the ground near by were well-packed bales of cottons, silks, carpets and other eastern ware. There were some sleek horses at a picket line; there were Armenian merchants, Turkish guards, and negro or Abyssinian slaves; but there was no sign of a woman in the caravan, or of Prince Rakkim Khan.

"Will your highness not rest in the shade and partake of coffee?" the old Turk asked.

I refused. Weary and dispirited, I turned away. Had they passed us or evaded us? And then, just when all was blackest, my foot struck against something half hidden beneath a bale of goods. It was the dog collar that I had seen in the apartment in London; there was no mistaking it. I sprang upon the old Turk and grasped him by the throat.

"You lying scoundrel, which way have they gone?" I cried, shaking him back and forth till his false teeth rattled in their setting.

He gurgled feebly. I released him, and he pointed feebly with shaking finger down the road by which they had come.

"They had ridden on horseback—all three," he stammered. "The prince and she and the priest. They will cross the mountains by the footroad five miles away. Curses on him for disturbing the progress of us merchants; we have been in mortal fear of him and his heretic priest, the Persian."

I cast my eye along the line of picketed beasts, evidently the stable which Rakkim had abandoned when he discovered us awaiting him. I must select the best and ride swiftly. Once over the Taurus, he could enlist unlimited aid among the Damascenes. I picked out two supple splendid beasts. Two minutes later they were bridled and saddled and I was following the sharp hoof-tracks into the mountains, as fast as I could pick them up.

Ten minutes afterward I saw them ascending a slope two miles away from me. They looked back, I think, for all halted, and the horses appeared to be turned in irresolution. Then they were off again, over the crest and away.

I rode each horse alternately, which gave my mounts an advantage of speed. Half an hour afterward and only the width of the valley divided us. Now I could see them plainly; I saw the green turban of the priest dark against the snows of the summit that rose in front of them. And then my heart leaped with joy. They could not cross that peak before I should be upon them. They had miscalculated the viability of the pass in early April, when every stream was a torrent and every path a morass. I hurried onward.

As my horses picked their way up the slope I saw the prince confer with his bishop. Then they deliberately turned back and rode toward me. Less than three hundred yards separated us now. I saw him spur his steed; he came toward me at a furious gallop; as he did so he pulled something from his breast and, an instant later, I heard the sound of the discharge, and felt my horse give a mighty leap into the air as the bullet struck her. She bent at the knees, her head hung; I could scarcely spring clear of her before she toppled and fell, pierced through the heart. At the same instant the other steed broke from my hand and went, plunging and rearing, down the snowy slope. As I rose I felt in my pistol pocket for my weapon. It was not there. Whether the old Turk had robbed me or whether I had lost it I do not know, but at this crisis I was totally unarmed.

Meanwhile the prince had reined in his horse a hundred feet away in anticipation of an exchange of bullets. Then he perceived my dilemma and, with a furious cry, rode me down and encircled me in the abandonment of his triumph, pointing a pistol at my brain.

I had risen to my feet; I watched him silently, because there was nothing to say. At last he spoke.

"In London," he said, his voice trembling with rage, "the laws do not permit an injured husband, whatever his rank, to take the life of the violator of his home. But in Syria—eh, monsieur, why should you not die?"

I hardly understood the meaning of his harangue; I was thinking of my unfulfilled mission and the failure of my country's ends.

He raised the pistol, took deliberate aim—then lowered it as a scream rang through the hills. A moment later I saw the princess come galloping down toward us, the priest at her side, in vain attempting to restrain her.

"You shall not kill him," she exclaimed in French. "I lied to you. He was no lover of mine."

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

COMING DRESS STYLES

Fuller Skirts—More Trimming—Other Things of Interest.

My Dear Spirit Readers:—

With these first few warm days, the ambitious housewife sees so much ahead to be accomplished that she hardly knows which way to turn first. To get the summer sewing over is about the most important. Underwear that is home made should have been mainly finished last month. Some finishings, such as buttons and buttonholes can still be left for evenings, for the women with good eyes and lamps. Next comes dresses and in these the greatest change is in skirts.

The skirts have gradually widened, which has been a great improvement. The plain skirt is not in first style, although for linen and piqué, the plainness is desirable for laundering. But the trimmed skirt is talked of most now, and it is not always easy for the home dressmaker to accomplish pannelers and tunics gracefully. Panniers are formed by extra material fulled slightly at hips, and this is drawn down to below the knees in back, where it is fulled and ends left with loose tacking. This is better accomplished with thin materials, chiffons, marquisettes, voiles, etc. Otherwise the hips are much enlarged in effect. Scallops are widely used on skirts, up and down and crossways. There will be a lavish use of fold and flounce, of cord and piping, of buttons and curved and button holed edges. Wherever there is the straight edge, there comes in the shallow curve and the overcast button hole stitch.

TAFFETA AND CHINTZ USED.

Taffeta, taffeta everywhere, not the old time stiff material, but soft and pliable. Hats are made of it entirely, and other hats are lavishly trimmed with it.

Chintz in the close old-timey design, is also used as gowns, trimming, vests, etc., and is very chic when not overdone.

The peplum blouse is the newest offering, and is made to wear with the separate skirt. It is a straight little affair that continues outside the skirt at the waist line for six or eight inches, is slashed at the sides, and straight front and back. The top is cut in peasant fashion, and there is a belt at the waist line, run through slides of the material.

IN THE SEWING ROOM.

In mending plaids or checked material several shades of silk threaded into one needle give good results. These must harmonize with the chief tone of the material.

Tape provided with eyelets for fastenings, as well as that with buttonholes, may be bought by the yard, so saving the busy woman a great deal of time. Hooks and eyes on tape, by the yard, are a great convenience, too.

Sew large battenberg rings on sash curtains to run the brass rod through, instead of putting it through the hem of the curtain. These rings will keep the muslin from sagging out quickly, and may be left on the curtains while they are in the wash.

To avoid the tape strings in boys' blouses, which are often untidy in appearance, put in the lower hem a mercerized elastic band, about half an inch wide and not quite so long as the boy is around measure. Fasten the elastic at each end; sew a button on one side and make a buttonhole on the other. This plan will be found much more satisfactory than the use of tape and neater.

In turning hems for tablecloths and napkins, run through the "foot hemmer" on the machines without having the needle threaded. You have then a uniform width hem. And where the machine needle has pierced the linen you can then by hand far easier than if this were not done.

TORN PLACKETS.

To prevent a torn placket, sew a hook and eye at the very bottom of the vent opening; then hook it together and pinch the hook down tight.

This keeps the placket very neat and obviates any possibility of tearing out when the skirt is slipped on or off.

HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES.

Verdigris on metal can be quickly removed by rubbing with a soft rag dipped in ammonia.

Feathers that have grown grimy can be given a bath in alcohol, after which they are shaken until dry.

Wash dishes used in preparing foods for a meal while the foods are cooking, and thus learn to get dishwashing simplified.

A plain cloth dipped in hot water and then in a saucer of bran will clean white paint and not injure it. The bran acts like soap on the paint.

If seams are pressed over a broomstick or any rounded piece, with care in keeping them straight, there will be no shining streak to mark their length.

IN PLACE OF SCALES.

As many families have no scales for weighing, this is a table of measures which can be used instead:

Weighing is always the best, but not always convenient.

The cup used is the ordinary coffee or kitchen cup, holding half a pint.

A set of tin measures, from a gill to a quart, is very useful in all cooking operations.

One quart of sifted flour is one pound.

One pint of granulated sugar is one pound.

Two cups of butter packed are one pound.

Five cupfuls of sifted flour are one pound.

A wine glassful is half a gill.

Eight even tablespoonfuls are a gill.

Four even saltspoonfuls make a teaspoonful.

A saltspoonful is a good measure of salt for all custards, puddings, blanc manges, etc.

A TASTY LUNCHEON DISH.

A pleasing variation may be given to the usual luncheon menu by the addition of a daintily prepared cheese dish. Here are a few delectable recipes that the cook might experiment with. Cheese pudding for instance is tasty. To make, melt half an ounce of grated rich cheese in a teacupful of boiling milk; in a small saucepan. When quite melted, add two ounces of breadcrumbs and two beaten eggs. Stir till quite hot, but do not let it boil. Pour onto a small dish and brown before the fire, or in the oven.

LITTLETON COOKIES.

Cream one cupful of butter, and add gradually while beating constantly, one and one half cups of sugar, and three eggs well beaten. Add one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in one and one-half tablespoonfuls of hot water and two cupfuls of flour sifted and sifted with one half teaspoonful of salt, and one tablespoonful cinnamon; then add one cupful of chopped English walnut meats, one cupful of raisins, seeded and chopped, and one and one-fourth cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls one inch apart on a buttered sheet and bake in moderate oven.

A COUNTRY WOMAN.

The parish hall of the Catholic church of the Immaculate Conception, East Chelten avenue, Germantown, was damaged to the extent of $3000 early last Sunday morning when a three-inch water main beneath the floor broke.

A number of Lansdale citizens are discussing a movement to have the Reading officials consider the removal or protection of the Main street crossing. A number of deaths have occurred there in a short time and it is one of the worst death traps in the county. The crossing, which is used daily by several hundred school children, is not even protected by a safety gate.

Girls

Read About These Three Girls. How Sick They Were and How Their Health Was Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Appleton, Wis.—"I take pleasure in writing you an account of my sickness. I told a friend of mine how I felt and she said I had female trouble and advised me to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as she had taken it herself for the same trouble with wonderful results. I had been sickly for two years and overworked myself, and had such bad feelings every month that I could hardly walk for pain. I was very nervous and easily tired out and could not sleep nights. I had dizzy spells, and pimples came on my face. But I have taken your Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has restored my health. I think it is the best medicine in existence."—Miss Cecilia M. Bauer, 1161 Lawrence St., Appleton, Wis.

A SCHOOL TEACHER'S GRATITUDE:

Geneva, Iowa.—"I have been teaching school for some years and I have neglected my health because I was too busy with my work to attend to myself properly. I suffered greatly every month and was on the verge of a nervous breakdown.

"I wrote to you about my condition and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Blood Purifier as you recommended. These remedies have done wonders for me and I can highly and widely recommend them to every suffering woman."—Miss Minnie Shaver, R. F. D. No. 1, Geneva, Iowa, c/o Sam Erickson.

A COLORADO GIRL'S CASE:

Montrose, Col.—"I was troubled very much with irregular periods. Sometimes two months would elapse. I suffered severe headache, was weak and nervous, could eat scarcely anything.

"I took both Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and the result was wonderful. I feel like another person.

"I think your remedies are the best on earth and cannot express my thankfulness to you for what they have done to me. I help my neighbors when they are sick, and I shall always recommend your medicines."—Miss Ella McCandless, Montrose, Col.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that a medicine that did so much for these girls will benefit any other girl who is suffering with the same troubles?

Does it not seem the only sensible thing to give such a medicine at least a trial? You may be sure that it can do you no harm, and there are lots of proof that it will do you much good.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Full moon, 3, last quarter 10 new moon 18, first quarter 25.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT answers a pressing demand put to him by the Governors of several States, that he again become a candidate for President, by saying that he will accept the nomination, if it is tendered to him.

Is there anything extraordinary in that?

Is there a capable, sensible member of the Republican party in the country who would not feel greatly honored by such tender and in duty bound to accept?

We do not think there is.

Yet a reader of some editorials in metropolitan newspapers might be led to believe that Mr. Roosevelt, who has just made this public announcement, is a very bad man, much worse than Benedict Arnold, Judas Iscariot, and others of that type.

As we see it the plain proposition is this:

Which Republican standard bearer can best lead the party to victory next November?

If you believe it is William Howard Taft, support him with your vote and influence.

If you believe Theodore Roosevelt is the man, then he is the man to support.

The same line of reasoning applies to LaFollette, Cummins, and the lesser known candidates.

No occasion for getting excited nor doing anything desperate, just be calm and think. Then act with energy.

The Editor of the Public Spirit believes that Mr. Roosevelt is a much stronger man before the people than is Mr. Taft, therefore wishing for the success of the Republican party and the continuation of its constructive policy, we favor the nomination of Roosevelt.

The Republican party should nominate a man who can be elected, that man is Roosevelt.

All the office-holding clan is for President Taft, and they may be able to nominate him. But they cannot elect him. It takes the votes of the plain people to do that. Can President Taft get that vote? Indications are to the contrary, as shown by elections held in various states during the past year. Under the Taft leadership the party is heading towards disaster. The time to change leaders is here.

POLITICS TO DATE

Governor Tener has appointed Judge James B. Holland, of the United States Court of the Eastern Pennsylvania district, a Conshohocken resident, to be a member of the board of trustees of Norristown State Hospital, succeeding John Booth, deceased.

Taxpayers of Lower Providence, Montgomery county, voted in favor of a proposition to purchase a $2500 stone-crushing outfit.

Norristown School board has under consideration the addition of a $10,000 annex to the James A. Welsh School.

PUSHING BEAN CANVASS.

Although there appears to be something of a lull in the campaign for the Republican Congressional nomination in the Montgomery-Bucks district, still there is continued activity among the aspirants for the place. This is particularly true of the canvass of Oscar O. Bean, of Bucks, who now appears to be generally regarded as the leading candidate in the race. In speaking of the situation the Philadelphia PUBLIC LEDGER says:

"Quiet but persistent campaigning has marked the week in the contest for the Republican Congressional nomination in the Eighth Pennsylvania District. The committee of prominent Bucks County Republicans who are pushing the canvass of Oscar O. Bean announce that they are receiving the most optimistic reports of steadily increasing Bean strength from all sections of Montgomery county. Members of this committee show no hesitancy in declaring that the nomination of Bean is assured."

TO THE DEMOCRATS OF THE EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Friends have asked me to give publicity to my position as a candidate for Delegate to the National Convention. I want your support at the primary on April 13th, because, if elected delegate,

I will try to represent the Democrats of this District, and of course shall hope to carry out their wishes in voting for a nominee for President—one who, we may expect, will do constructive work for the advancement of Democratic principles. At this time the majority seem to favor Gov. Wilson—a preference agreeable to me, as I knew him while I was a student at Princeton and have the greatest admiration for him and respect for his ability.

For National Committeeman from Pennsylvania, I shall favor the election of such person as may seem likely to harmonize and unite the party and be desired by the Democrats of this District—one whom we may reasonably trust to act for the good of the party, and not for selfish power nor in aid of the schemes of individuals.

I am for the thorough reorganization of the party and for placing leadership in the hands of men, who by unselfish devotion to the party will bring to its support all faithful Democrats—if possible, the leaders should come from outside of, or be unobjectionable to any contending faction, and be free from rancor towards their fellow Democrats. I am unalterably opposed to the control of the state organization as it has been. Bucks county, through its member in the State Central Committee, without consultation with the Standing Committee, or the voters, has been placed in the position of voting to retain in control, as leaders or masters, men who had proved their incapacity by disrupting the party. If the issue is confined between these men and those who are called the Reorganizers, I am for the Reorganizers. We want leadership, not dictatorship. Bucks should stand with Montgomery county; and if the Bucks Democrats had had a chance to be heard, Bucks county would have declared for reorganization when Montgomery did so.

For some time after being an announced candidate for National Delegate I was unopposed. Then a prominent Bucks county Democrat, after outlining his wishes upon the question of the distribution of future patronage, insisted, as the conditions of his support, that in any reorganization of the party which might take place, I should oppose those whom he termed the "Reorganizers"—a condition at once absurd and impossible—and that I should agree, unconditionally, to vote against a candidate, named by him, for National Committeeman. I refused. Within a week following this conversation a candidate appeared against me in Bucks county, closely related to the gentleman referred to. This opponent had the immediate support of the latter and of those of his friends who take exception to my refusal to make the deal mentioned in compliance with his terms. The contest which has been precipitated is their doing, not mine. I want to see a united party, and have looked for it a long time. But, better a party alive, interested, contending within itself, seeking capable, unselfish leaders, and holding to its principles; than a party with no fight in it, subject to the bid and call of one man, leaving at home on election day voters enough to win, hopeless in its leaders and despondent in its defeats.

To answer some misrepresentations: I did not agree to support my opponent; nor to withdraw and substitute some one else; nor am I the candidate of any "interests outside the county," nor of any person whatsoever except, as I believe, the majority of the Democrats of Bucks county.

An Ordinance

An Ordinance signifying the desire of the corporate authorities of the Township of Abington for an increase of the indebtedness therein of the sum of $164,000.00.

Whereas a number of the roads, streets and highways of the Township of Abington in the County of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania are not hardened or macadamized and have no stone or other permanent foundation of any kind, and the needs of public travel thereon are of such a nature as to require some such permanent improvement; and which improvement will require the expenditure of $150,000.00.

And whereas under the bond issue of the First day of May, A. D., 1894, there remains a balance due by the said Township of $14,000.00, bearing interest at Four and one-half (4½) per cent. which balance it is the desire of the Board of Township Commissioners to pay off and refund the said bonds and create a new loan for the said amount at a lower rate of interest.

Therefore the Board of Township Commissioners of Abington Township, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, (being the corporate authorities thereof) in special meeting met, do hereby enact and ordain:

SECTION 1. That it is the desire of the Board of Township Commissioners of Abington Township, and they herein and hereby signify the same, that the indebtedness of the said Township of Abington be increased in the sum of $164,000.00, for the purpose of paying off and refunding the balance due of $14,000.00, under the bond issue of the First day of May, A. NO. 61.

An Ordinance

An Ordinance providing for a special election for the purpose of obtaining the assent of the electors of the Township of Abington to an increase of the indebtedness thereof in the sum of $164,000.00.

WHEREAS by Ordinance heretofore adopted the Board of Township Commissioners of Abington Township, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, signified their desire that the indebtedness thereof be increased in the sum of $164,000.00, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, and that proper legal steps be promptly taken to carry the same into effect; and inasmuch as such an increase can only be made with the assent of the electors of said Township obtained at a public election in the manner provided by law, therefore,

The Board of Township Commissioners of Abington Township, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, (being the corporate authorities thereof) in special meeting met, do hereby enact and ordain:

SECTION 1. The amount of the last assessed valuation of the taxable property in said Township is $7,773,555.00.

The amount of the existing indebtedness of the said Township is $169,000.00.

The amount of the proposed increase of indebtedness thereof is $164,000.00, and its percentage of the said assessed valuation is 2 170578-1554711 per centum.

The total indebtedness of said Township after the proposed increase is made will be $333,000.00, and the percentage which such total indebtedness bears to the last assessed valuation of taxable property in said Township is 4 147652-518237 per centum.

The purpose for which the indebtedness of the said Township of Abington is proposed to be increased is to put the roads, streets and highways thereof in better condition for public travel by making improvements thereon of a permanent and durable character, and the paying off and refunding the balance due of $14,000.00, under the bond issue of the First day of May, A. D., 1894.

DAVISVILLE AND SOUTHAMPTON.

OUR ACTIVE FIREMEN.

Southampton Fire Company again showed their ability as fire fighters last Saturday, when called to subdue a stubborn blaze which threatened total destruction of The White Bear hotel at Richboro, owned and conducted by Hiram McCool. The fire had gained such headway that the firemen found a hard task confronting them, but as soon as the apparatus got to working the blaze was quickly under control. The very best of discipline was maintained, which is the wonder of other companies. Hatboro Fire Company also appeared, and did good work, although the blaze was beyond the power of chemical engines. The hand pump was kept working for one hour and a half and two streams of water were forced on the blaze. The fire practically gutted the entire building, especially after an opening was made in the tin roof, but was the only alternative, as the fire was burning under the tin on the main roof. Residents of Richboro did valiant work at the handles of the hand engine and in assisting with the hose. Fourteen charges of chemicals were used in addition to the water engine. As it was again necessary to send back to fire house for supplies. A motion will be made at next meeting to get a small wagon to which hose carriage can be attached and which can carry chemical engine supplies. George Stockburger made a new record for taking out the chemical engine, as it only took him twenty minutes to go from the fire house to Richboro. This is remarkable when it is considered that the engine weighs 2400 pounds and six men rode on it. Mrs. Erickson, who lives adjoining the hotel, was so impressed with the work of the fire company that she gave the company a ten dollar bill. Steve Mortensen's team took the hand engine to the fire and John Fetter took hose carriage and supplies.

NEIGHBORS HEAR OF PANAMA

Miss Boswell Tells of Everyday Life in the Canal Zone.

"The Neighbors" held a public meeting at Hatboro Baptist church on Saturday afternoon, February 24th, 1912, to give all an opportunity to hear Miss Helen Varick Boswell on "Everyday Life in the Panama Zone."

The church was well filled, a number being obliged to go in the gallery. After the reading of the minutes, President Elizabeth R. Wood called on Mr. Yoder for a vocal solo, which was enthusiastically encored.

Miss Sarah Yerkes gave a report of visit to Malvern women's club.

Mrs. Anna D. Hallowell announced that a cooking lecture would be given at Loller Hall on Saturday, March 2nd at 3 p. m. by Miss Farrell, of Wayne on a day's dietary with special reference to school lunches. Through the courtesy of the Philadelphia Suburban Gas and Electric Company an electric stove will be provided.

Mrs. Susan H. Jarrett announced that the advising board had considered the subject of giving a picture to the Hatboro High school. On motion the vote was favorable and it was so ordered, the selection being left to advisory board.

After another vocal solo by Mr. Yoder, Miss Boswell was introduced, the president calling for the Chatauqua salute, which was given with a will. For 1½ hours this bright, animated young woman kept her audience spellbound with her vivid descriptions of life in the Panama Zone. She had been there twice, once four years ago and again last year. She speaks of the climate as delightful and says it is an ideal time to make the trip now while the dry season lasts. This is four months of the year, while for 8 months it rains. The Isthmus is described as hilly and in some places almost mountainous.

The eight government towns are built high up on these hills. After the French failed in the undertaking on account of the terrible loss of life from yellow fever, the work was dropped. America saw that sanitary conditions must be studied and after the purchase from France for $40,000,000 succeeded in killing the mosquitoes which were the means of carrying the disease. Now Miss Boswell says she saw fewer mosquitoes there than in New York or New Jersey. She feels that America owes France a debt of gratitude for opening the way and showing the methods of work. President Taft when he was Secretary of War, recognized the fact that the wives of the men were not satisfied after a time because there was nothing of general interest to bind them together and Miss Boswell, as an active member of the New York Federation of women's clubs, was invited to go and see what could be done. In a short time she succeeded in forming organizations with various departments, such as education, home, and entertainment. Conditions are now very much changed. The homes are beautified, there are excellent schools and the largest and best equipped laundry in the world. Miss Boswell concluded by saying that if Roosevelt's big stick had much to do with the success of the Panama Canal, the woman's club also helped greatly. A vote of thanks was tendered the speaker. Mr. Yoder again favored the audience with songs and at the request of the president the whole audience joined in singing America.

A general invitation is extended to all to attend the cooking lecture at Loller Hall, March 2nd, particularly the mothers of school children.

MUSICALE.

A musicale and social was given in the lecture room of the Baptist church last Friday evening by the Farther Lights Society. The program consisted of piano duet, Misses Florence Williams and Eleanor Fenton; instrumental solo, Miss Elizabeth Morris; reading, Miss Elvie Yeakle; violin solo, Samuel Buckman, accompanied by Elsie Buckman on the piano; piano solo, Miss Louisa Milnor; piano duet, Misses Alma White and Rena Appel; reading, Miss Olive Thompson; piano duet, Miss Rachel Davis and Oscar Walton; piano solo, Miss Passmore; piano duet, Misses Ada M. Walton and Ethel S. Neely.

Mr. Braden, of Glenside, gave a short talk.

After the program refreshments and a social time followed. The room was well filled by people and all had an enjoyable time. A silver offering was taken at the door, which amounted to $8.76.

The room was decorated with flags and a picture of George Washington and other pictures.

Miss Anna Logan spent the week-end with relatives at Ambler.

A traveling company came to town on Saturday and gave a show in Loller hall in the evening before a small audience.

Charles Lukens thanks his friends for the postal cards which he received on his birthday, last Friday. 23 cards were received.

Note the advertisement of Joseph P. Weldo to be found of page 2 of this issue. He is engaged in heater, and sheet iron work.

Horsham Farmers' Club will hold the March meeting at the home of Newton E. and Elizabeth R. Wood, on Saturday evening, March 2nd at 7.30 o'clock.

So much water fell during the electrical storm last Monday night that the borough streets were flooded in many places. Some damage was done to walks and streets.

The Farther Lights Society of the Baptist church will hold their regular monthly meeting next Sunday afternoon at the close of the Sunday school session. Miss Ethel S. Neely will be the leader.

In less than a half hour after the receipt of the alarm telling of the fire at McCool's hotel, Richboro, last Saturday afternoon, the Hatboro firemen had their auto truck on the spot and had a chemical stream on the blaze. How is that for celerity?

THE WALKING PURCHASE.

Paper Read By Miss Helen Carrell Before the Hatboro Neighbors.

No event in the early history of Bucks county gave so much dissatisfaction to the Indians, and led to severer criticism of the Penns than "The Walking Purchase.". This was under the treaty of 1737, which gave to the Proprietaries all that part of Bucks county above a line drawn from the Neshaminy through the lower part of Wrightstown to the Delaware at the mouth of Knowles' creek.

The first purchase of land in this country of the Indians, was in 1682 by William Markham. This embraced all the territory between the Neshaminy and the Delaware as high up as Wrightstown and Upper Makefield, after Penn arrived he purchased the land lying between the Pennypack and the Neshaminy. The next treaty is said to have been in 1686 by which the Indians conveyed to Penn all the land above the upper line of the treaty 1682, extending as far inland "as a man can walk in a day and a half," to be bound on the west by the Neshaminy and on the east by the Delaware.

After this treaty white settlers established themselves, in considerable numbers, on the lower part of the purchase, and some settled in the country about the Lehigh. The Indians became uneasy and desired to have the limits of the treaty of 1686 marked by definite metes and bounds. They had several meetings with the Proprietaries and decided August 25th, 1737, that the northern boundary should be determined by walking a day and a half in a northwest direction from a point in the headline of the purchase of 1682.

The Penns arranged a preliminary walk about April 1735, without the knowledge of the Indians.

Immediately after the treaty of August 25th, 1737, three famous walkers were selected, namely; Edward Marshall, James Yeates and Solomon Jennings. The Indians sent several of their young men along to see that the thing was fairly done. The walkers were promised 5 pounds in money and five hundred acres of land, but Marshall always maintained that he never received any renumeration. The place of starting was fixed at a large chestnut tree near where the Wrightstown meeting house now stands. This tree was selected because it was a well known point and near the northern boundary of the Markham purchase. The walkers were accompanied by several persons on horse-back, and provisions were carried for them.

On the morning of September 19th, 1737, Marshall, Jennings and Yeates stood with their hands on the chestnut tree, and as the sun showed his face above the horizon, word was given by Sheriff Smith and they started. Guided by the compass they walked in as straight a line as obstructions would permit. Some of the way being on the Durham road, Yeates led with a light step and Marshall came last walking in a careless manner, swinging a hatchet in his hand. They slept on the northern side of the mountain near "Smith's Gap." The walk was resumed at sunrise of the second day, and the extremest point reached at 12 m. when Marshall, who alone held out, threw himself at length on the ground, and grasped a sapling, which marked the end of the line, Jennings gave out about ten or eleven o'clock of the first day, returned to his home and never recovered his health. Yeates, who fell in the creek at the foot of the mountain the morning of the second day, was blind when picked up and died in three days. Marshall lived to the gae of ninety. The walk is said to have followed an Indian path that led from the hunting grounds of the Susquehannas down to the Delaware near Bristol, and the distance walked, sixty-one and one quarter miles.

When the walkers had reached the farthest point possible it remained to run the line direct to the Delaware, which the Indians thought would be drawn in a direct line to the river at the nearest point, but instead it was run at right angles, to the line of the walk, and struck the river at or near Lasawaxen. These lines embraced all the land within the forks of Delaware, the celebrated Minisinks flats, and in fact all the land worth anything south of the Blue Mountains. Some land belonging to the Minsi Indians, which the Delawares had no right to convey. This northern line had not been fixed by the treaty, which left it open for the Penns to make their own selection of the course and they are accused of intentionally including in the purchase all the good lands south of the Blue Mountains. The quantity of land embraced in the purchase was about five hundred thousand acres.

The walk gave great dissatisfaction to the Indians, and was mainly the cause of the general Indian council at Easton in 1756. The two main causes of complaint were, first that the walk should have been made up along the Delaware, 2nd, that the walkers walked too fast and too constantly, they should have stopped occasionally to shoot game, smoke and eat.

The decision was probably hard for the Indians, and they may have been over-reached in the treaty of 1735, but when the Proprietaries came to have the terms of the purchase carried out, they claimed no more than they were entitled to, "As far as a man can go in a day and a half" back into the woods was to be the limit of the purchase.

The Bucks County Historical Society, in 1886, erected a fitting monument at Wrightstown, to mark the starting point of "The Walking Purchase," at a cost of $101.00, and on three sides is the following legend.

"To the memory of the Lenni Lenape Indians
Ancient owners of this region
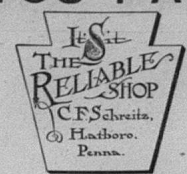
These stones are placed on this spot, the starting point of the "Indian Walk," September 19, 1737.

HELEN CARRELL.

YOU PAY



We pay for everything we receive—nay all things can be attained if we but pay the price. One of the very few EMANCIPATED MEN in America bought redemption from the bondage of selfish ambition at a terrible price.

In this matter of health just a few plain rules suffice, and these rules fairly followed, soon grow into a personal habit, and the habit's a pleasure. Folks who get fussy about their digestion and assume a personal charge of nerves, have "nerves" and are apt to have no digestion.

"I have a pain in my side," said the woman to the busy doctor "Forget it" was the curt advice. Get the Health Habit, and forget it, is excellent advice. It is the same with your soul as it is with your body. The man who is always stewing about his soul has a very small and insignificant one.

You don't have to trouble about your soul's salvation. Everything in the universe worth saving will be saved. Don't worry.

That advice of the busy doctor should be used by the preacher, and when the black-ant breed comes around fussing about their souls, the advice should be "Forget it!"

FRIENDS' ASSOCIATION.

The new officers elected for the ensuing five months took their places, Vice President Howard Jarrett presiding. Miss Elizabeth Satterthwaite being secretary. William J. Hallowell gave a Bible reading, Bothwell Park gave a recitation. Mrs. J. P. Shook then gave an address on Robert Browning's poem, "Rabbi Ben Ezra." The Rabbi was a real person and is supposed to be answering the questions of the noble young men who have studied under him, and who now recognize that their beloved and honored teacher must soon leave them to enter a future life. He tells them that they need not regret this, that old age is not a thing to be dreaded if life is lived rightly, and as in nature the evening is often more beautiful than the day, so in life the close may be more beautiful than the beginning. The address was much appreciated by all present. Following this, Martha M. Jarrett read an article by John J. Cornell, "What the Society of Friends Needs." A recitation was given by Joseph H. Penrose, "Heigh-O My Deary." Current topics were discussed by Elizabeth H. Comly and others. Harry J. Shoemaker, of Doylestown, was present, and spoke of the various exercises of the Association. He thinks Friends should be well acquainted with the Discipline and with their past history. Isaac Michener also spoke of the pleasure and benefit he had received from the afternoon's program. After sentiments the meeting was adjourned until 3rd month, 31st, 1912.

BRANCHTOWN'S POOR SCHOOL

Children are Housed in Old Dwelling.

One hundred and fifty-four pupils penned up in four narrow rooms in a makeshift school building composed of two small dwelling houses, the entrances and stairways of which are of the ordinary small-house type, is the situation the annex of the Morton public school, of Branchtown.

The ventilation and heating are bad. Disease has been prevalent since the opening of this annex. Scarlet fever, measles, whooping cough and chickenpox have been spread to many families whose children have been in attendance.

Superintendent Brumbaugh has recommended the purchase of ground and the erection of a building thereon.

The difference between charity and philanthropy is that charity needs no press agent.

Overwork at his various jobs caused Constable Alvin Meseroll, of Morrisville, to tender his resignation, which was accepted by the Court at Doylestown.

"Strict enforcement of the law," said Judge Ryan, at Doylestown, to the Grand Jury, "prevents Bucks county being overrun by the criminals of New York and Philadelphia."

gifted.

"Will you swear upon the book of the prophet Jesus that you have not pursued us to win her love from me?" he cried.

"I have seen her but once," I answered. "That was in London, where her maid, approaching me in the street, invoked my aid in helping her to escape from you, who had stolen her from her convent in Paris."

"Paris?" he cried. "Why, she came to London of her own accord, to discuss marriage with me, seeing that she had none to negotiate for her. Truly the ways and schemes of women are past finding out." He turned sad looked into my eyes with a piercing gaze.

"Why did you pursue us hither?" he asked.

"Why did you fly?" I answered.

"Why?" he repeated. "Because I feared the English government wished to steal my bride and give her to you. Perdition! She told me that. Malediction on women's pranks!"

"You had married her?" I cried in astonishment. "I pursued you in order to release her from her captivity and secure the throne of Beluchistan for her. Had you made known to my government that you had married her with her consent, we would have made a treaty with you."

The prince let his revolver fall.

"Allah give us domination over women!" he said mildly. "Verily their tricks are stronger than our right arms. Here this woman has set me at war with you and your nation, and all to gratify her pride and to test some saying of a dead and gone poet." He paused. A smile illumined his face. "Is not this the first encounter—the one before that in the garden?" he said.

"Our first encounter?" I exclaimed.

"Yes. For my bishop married us and, incidentally, destroyed the motive for your pursuit."

"Well?"

"Parbleu, friend, did I not take your queen with my bishop three times in succession on that same afternoon when we played chess together in the shop window?"

MOST LOYAL FRIEND OF MAN

Eloquent and Deserved Tribute Paid to This Inseparable and Faithful Companion.

Where can man find in the animal kingdom a truer friend, a closer companion, a more faithful guardian or a more efficient and braver ally than the dog?

Friendship in life may spring from many causes, and, under test, vanish like mist before the sun and wind, but the friendship of a dog can always be relied upon unless you yourself destroy it.

A dog will not bite the hand that gives it food and drink.

Can one imagine a closer friendship between animal and man than that existing between the lonely trapper and his faithful companion? What company they are to each other! What confidences of association have made communication an open book to them, the dog to the man, the man to the dog. A look, a nod, a gesture, a single word, and with a wag of the tail the dog understands and obeys.

And mindful of his good friend, the lone hunter sees to it that he goes not hungry if there's enough for one, yet not enough for two.

At the blazing campfire in the early hours of the night the trees have listened to many a one sided conversation between man and dog, and not one sided either, for with eyes and wagging tail the dog replied. And when the master rolled himself in his blanket and went off to sleep, with his faithful dog curled up beside him, a sense of security, absolute, was his.

Let a prowler come within scenting distance of the camp and a low growl told the master to be alert and doing.

With what glee the dog trotted by its master's side when the rounds to traps were made! A rabbit, a squirrel, a hedgehog or a porcupine might entice him off the beaten path, but only for a moment. He had grown old in the service and understood that such game was not for such a staid dog as he.

Then the day comes when the decree of war has come upon our four footed friend, for in the tussle with old bruin it has been maimed to the death. With what care does the master lave and bind the wounds and how lovingly he beds and shelters his old companion. Nothing is neglected to make him comfortable and bring him back to strength and health. But it is no use. The old dog, refusing to eat, grows lank and wan, until, when too weak to raise its head, it can only look and feebly tap the ground with its grateful tail. And then comes the saddest duty of his life, to open the ground and hide away the last of a dog that was to him everything that man or woman might have been, but was not. A dog that never lied to him, that was always kind and willing, ever mindful of his master and faithful and loyal even unto death.

POULTRY

REMEDY FOR LIVER TROUBLE

Generally Caused by Indigestion Brought on by Irregular and Improper Feeding of Fowls.

Generally speaking, liver troubles follow acute indigestion. This indigestion may be brought about by irregular feeding or being fed on one kind of grain too long, dirt and sour feed, with a poor supply of grain. To withhold the feed a long time and then allow it in over amount is one of the most fruitful sources of digestive disorders.

Drinking water which has been contaminated with filth, or which has stood in a warm place or in the sunshine until it has become putrid; exposure to draughts, cold rains, or damp roosting quarters, particularly during the molting season, are all conducive to indigestion.

If any one of these conditions surrounds your fowls, change them, putting them in light, dry houses and giving them wholesome, nutritious food. In very bad cases give daily five grains of rhubarb and every day one grain of calomel. Give them plenty of grit and charcoal. Charcoal is one of the best purifiers for the system of either fowl, animal or man.

The liver is one of the most important organs of the body, furnishing bile, one of the principal digestive fluids. It also assists in some of the most necessary chemical changes which occur in the blood. It is therefore an easy matter for it to become deranged from the causes that produce indigestion.

Inflammation of the liver is quickly followed by death unless immediate relief can be given. The symptoms are a yellow appearance of the skin and yellow or slightly bloody evacuations.

One of the chief indications of this disorder is lameness, especially of the right leg, and when this shows itself you may be pretty sure that inflammation of the liver is going on. The treatment of birds so affected is not profitable unless they are very valuable for breeding or exhibition purposes. The remedy is one-half to one grain of calomel to begin with, followed by 20 grains of Epsom salts and 2 grains of bicarbonate of soda after 12 hours. Naphthol or benzo-napthol may be given twice a week to disinfect the intestinal canal.

When the sick bird is considerably improved, give green food, tonics of raw beef, and allow the bird free exercise in the open air. The disease is not contagious, but the cause that produced it in one bird may affect the whole flock.

FOUNTAIN IS SELF-FEEDING

two inches of the top. It was then filled with water and a milk pan inverted over it and turned upside down. Water will flow in pan till it reaches the hole in the can, says a writer in the Farm and Home. Using a deep pan prevents getting it full of dirt.

Nationality of Eggs.

Is it possible to tell the nationality of an egg by inspection? The question is raised in acute form by the evidence given by the prosecution of a Lancashire, England, firm for selling Russian eggs as Irish, which resulted in acquittal. The experts varied, as even experts will. One confidently pronounced the eggs in question Russians nearly five weeks old; another said they were second class Russians; a third specified the south of Russia.

On the other hand, experts for the defense were equally positive that nobody could tell the birthplace of an egg from external examination. One witness said that when eggs were bad their nationality was indeterminable.

On the whole, one is bound to come to the conclusion that the average purchaser of eggs must take their nationality upon trust.

Science of Feeding.

The feeding of fowls has become as much a science as has the feeding of dairy or beef cattle. Poultrymen have their balanced rations for their fowls. They feed especially for egg production, growth and fattening purposes. The farmer too often feeds for convenience and relies on corn to produce all the above requirements, hence the poor results on many farms. "Variety is the spice of life" in the poultry yard as well as with humans.

Of Interest to Farmers

DISEASE OF HONEY BEES.

The United States Department of Agriculture calls attention to the fact that American foul brood has been found to exist in Montgomery county. The Department has no means of knowing how long the disease has existed in the region, but desires to notify bee keepers of the trouble and to suggest that, if not already informed concerning the disease, they inform themselves at once. Very frequently colonies of bees are destroyed by disease and the loss is attributed by the bee keeper to some other cause. Farmers' Bulletin No. 442, The Treatment of Bee Diseases, gives a description of the brood diseases and methods of treatment. It will be sent free on request to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Attention is also called to the fact that the brood diseases do not at all injure honey for human consumption, so that there need be no fear on the part of purchasers of honey.

CHARGES FRAUD IN HORSE DEAL

Hair Was Dyed and "Critter" was Old Enough to Vote.

E. F. Butz, of Newtown, who was arrested on a warrant issued February 15 on a charge of false pretense was given a hearing on Friday before Squire Kraft, and held in $300 bail for the Bucks County Court.

The arrest was the result of a horse deal in which Butz represented a horse as 15 years old, when it was found the animal was near 23.

The warrant also stated he had dyed the hide of the horse in an effort to add to its sleek appearance. However, the purchaser of the horse discovered the fraud and had the warrant issued, which resulted in the case being sent to court at Doylestown.
